Asia Law Society 2008 Symposium: Activist Lawyers And Muckraking Journalists-New Pressures For Legal Reform In China

Location: 100 HH

Event Contact: David Caragliano, dcaragli@umich.edu, 914.329.7173

Few would claim that China today is a nation which enjoys “rule-of-law.” Aggressive lawyers have ended up as defendants themselves, and investigative media publications have been selectively shut down. However, many would argue that China is moving toward a system that—at least in rhetoric and formal institutions—seeks to restrain the arbitrary exercise of state and Party power, and provides the promise, if not always the reality, of reliance on law to articulate and assert rights.

On Saturday, March 15th, 2008, Asia Law Society will host our first student-run symposium bringing together an incredible cross section of scholars and practitioners to address topics related to the rule of law in China. This symposium will seek to explore the interconnected phenomena of the establishment of the legal profession (including lawyers, judges and regulators in the bureaucracy), an increasingly assertive media, and legal reform in China. We have organized three panel discussions.

The first panel will discuss the role of the media and certain cases where media coverage has helped to facilitate law enforcement. The second panel will analyze the impact of growing and at times entrepreneurial bar. Lastly, to address the unique “outside in” dynamic that appears as an element of China’s evolving legal system, the third panel will look at the ways in which China’s engagement with the world has affected its legal reform.

A keynote address will be delivered by Joseph Kahn, former Beijing Bureau Chief for the New York Times. Our panelists are luminous legal scholars and practitioners from the U.S. and China, including: Prof. Nicholas Howson from our law school; Prof. Ken Lieberthal, who served as senior director for Asia at the National Security Council, as well as special assistant to the President for National Security Affairs, the Clinton administration; Eric Richardson, Foreign Service Officer of the U.S. Department of State and Foreign Policy Fellow and Counsel to the House Foreign Affairs Committee; Yang Jian and Li Jing Song, our muckraking journalist and activist lawyer from China (respectively).

For registration and a complete list of our panelists and their bios, please go to http://students.law.umich.edu/als

Questions? Interested in volunteering for our symposium? E-mail David Caragliano at dcaragli@umich.edu or Yan Xiao at yanxiao@umich.edu.

The Dean Acheson Legal Stage Program at the Court of Justice of the European Communities is offering stage opportunities to a limited number of students from select US law schools at the Court of Justice and the Court of First Instance. The U.S. Embassy in Luxembourg has chosen the University of Michigan Law School to participate, and University of Michigan law students and alumni are eligible to apply for these stage opportunities. This is a tremendous opportunity to work in the chambers of a Judge or Advocate General of the European Court of Justice in Luxembourg. The position will provide invaluable insight into the workings of the Court. The work environment is very collegial, as clerks of all chambers spend a good deal of time together within and outside the Court of Justice.

There are two possible Dean Acheson Legal Stage periods for 2008-2009:

- Fall Term (mid-September to mid-December)
- Spring Term (mid-February to mid-May)

Please submit your application electronically to Barbara Glispin at glispin@umich.edu. Please advise your two references that they may also submit by email or by fax to 734-763-9182. A committee of Law School faculty will decide which applications to nominate to the Court.

If you have any questions, please contact Virginia Gordan, Assistant Dean of International Programs, University of Michigan Law School at 734-764-5269 (phone); 734-763-9182 (fax); vgordan@umich.edu (e-mail).

For more information, refer to our website at http://www.law.umich.edu/centersandprograms/cicl/programs/Pages/DeanAchesonLegalStageProgram.aspx.
