

Cristiane Bena Dias

Cristiane Dias holds an LL.M on International Environmental Law from Queen Mary University of London. She is currently pursuing an S.J.D. at American University Washington College of Law. Her thesis entitled Environmental Impact Assessment (EIA) in Brazil: What Needs to Be Changed? aims to provide amendments to Brazilian EIA regulation in light of worldwide best practices.

After completing her LL.M, she has worked for five years, as an environmental lawyer in oil and gas and steel mill sectors, in major national and transnational companies based in Brazil. She also worked as an independent consultant, when she wrote legal chapters of Environmental Impact Statements in order to assess installation of ports in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.

During Cristiane's SJD first year, she worked at American University Washington College of Law, assisting the Federal Judge Peter Messitte coordinate the academic program: The Brazil-US Legal and Judicial Studies. Additionally, she was an intern researcher at the Bank on Human Rights Coalition, a civil society coalition based in the Center of International Environmental Law (CIEL), in Washington, DC, where, among other duties, she developed indicators for creating a toolkit to incorporate human rights within the standard social and environmental assessment framework of development finance institutions.
