ession, Circulation and The American Heart Journal. Physicians from all parts of this country and from many others throughout the world came here to study under his guidance, and became his devoted friends and admirers, for however exacting he may have been as a scientist and diagnostician there was no ostentation in Dr. Wilson's nature, and his wide interests outside of his medical work made him a delightful companion. It was indeed an honor to this University to have claimed so distinguished a physician as an alumnus and for some thirty-five years as a member of its faculty. The Regents of the University of Michigan join in the sorrow which Dr. Wilson's death has brought to so many and express to his surviving family their heartfelt sympathy.

The Board adopted the following memoirs for inclusion in these minutes on the occasion of the retirement of four members of the faculty:

For the past thirty-six years Dr. Louis Harry Newburgh has been a valued and distinguished member of the medical faculty of this University. Coming to Ann Arbor in 1916 as Assistant Professor of Internal Medicine after graduation from Harvard College and Harvard Medical School, graduate study in Vienna and Berlin, and service in both the Harvard Medical School and the Massachusetts General Hospital, Dr. Newburgh was promoted to an associate professorship in 1920 and two years later to the professorship of clinical investigation in the Department of Internal Medicine, which he has occupied since that time. The studies which he has conducted in this capacity have placed him an authority on the subject of nutrition, obesity, and diseases basically involving metabolism, and his many publications in this field have brought him widespread recognition. The University has indeed been fortunate to command Dr. Newburgh's services during so many years for the better instruction of young men and women in medical training and for the care of patients seeking restored health at the University Hospital. Since he has at his own request been permitted to retire in the faculty as of his sixty-ninth birthday, June 17, 1952, the Regents of the University of Michigan extend to Dr. Newburgh their cordial thanks and felicitations and confer upon him the title Professor Emeritus of Clinical Investigation, inviting him to avail himself of all the courtesies customarily extended to emeritus members of the faculty.

In extending to John Barker Waite, Professor of Law, their felicitations upon his attaining his seventieth birthday on August 14, 1952, and consequently becoming eligible for retirement under our Bylaws, the Regents of the University of Michigan recall his activity as a teacher, research scholar, and author which Professor Waite has made in the forty years of his membership in our Law faculty. A graduate of Yale College and of the Law School of this University, Professor Waite assumed his present position in 1912 and since then has been largely responsible for the instruction in criminal law, patent law, and the law relating to sales. In all three of these fields he has produced case books used for legal instruction and has written articles for the professional journals, and particularly in the areas of criminal law, police procedure, law enforcement, and society's dealing with the criminal he is regarded as an authority, widely known through his contributions to nationally circulated magazines and frequently entrusted with investigatory or advisory commissions by the state and national bar associations. Professor Waite has also served his country through the War Production Board and the Supreme Court's Committee on Rules, his community as a member of the City Council, and the University as a member of several of its most important committees. He now retires in the enjoyment of the respect and friendship of his faculty colleagues, his former students, and the many others with whom he has been brought into professional contact. The Regents wish him well, and confer upon him the title Professor Emeritus of Law, inviting him to avail himself of all the courtesies customarily extended to emeritus members of the faculty.

Charles Howard Stocking, a native of Stockbridge, Michigan, and a graduate of this University with the degrees Ph.C. (1907), B.S. (1909), and M.S. (1923), has for the past thirty-two years been a valued and respected member of the faculty of the University of Michigan. From 1947 to 1949 he was Acting Director of the College of Pharmacy, and from that time until 1951 Professor of Pharmacy and Dean of the College of Pharmacy. A man of ready sympathy and understanding, and with long experience in pharmaceutical manufacture and pharmaceutical education, Dean Stocking enjoys a wide acquaintance and many friendships throughout the profession, especially among the graduates of our College of Pharmacy who have profited both by his instruction and by his counsel.
