played key roles in such positions as chairman of the Education and Training Board, chairman of the Board of Professional Affairs, president of the Division of Counseling Psychology; also as a member of the Executive committee of the Division of Clinical Psychology, of the Council of Representatives, and the Policy and Planning Board. So too, he served on the National Institute of Mental Health’s Clinical Program Research Review Committee, the American Board of Examiners in Professional Psychology, and most recently as president of the Society for Psychotherapy Research.

His scholarly interests, as well as his research and publications have been wide ranging and varied, and repetitively have left their indelible mark on the field. He and a group of collaborating graduate students convincingly empirically demonstrated the relationship of personality development to occupational choice. He not only drew up a masterful blueprint for psychotherapy research in his celebrated Research Strategies in Psychotherapy but he also launched the productive and influential Psychotherapy Research Project, reknowned for its conceptually and methodologically sophisticated approach to psychotherapy research. While others dealt almost exclusively with treatment outcome studies, he wisely focused on dissecting the multiple variables whose configurations and interactions in the therapeutic process differentially led to and account for treatment outcome. Similarly, his work on principles of counseling, lucidly set forth in Psychological Counseling, remains a landmark in its theoretically integrative approach, its insistence on empirical foundations for the field and incisive conceptual analysis of the dimensions of the counseling experience.

The Regents now salute this distinguished psychologist for his dedicated service by naming him Professor Emeritus of Psychology.

R. EUGENE BOSSART, Earl V. Moore Professor of Music, will retire from active faculty status as of May 31, 1984.

A beloved member of the faculty for 30 years, he has been honored not only with one of the two named professorships in the School of Music, but also with the Harold Haugh Faculty Award for excellence in studio teaching and a University Distinguished Faculty Award. In a lighter vein, he was the subject—and object—of a “Bossart Roast” organized and presented last April by affectionate and irreverent students who were abetted by a number of his faculty colleagues and former students.

Professor Bossart came to Michigan from a flourishing career as accompanist to leading artists in performances in North and South America and Europe. That career had been encouraged and aided in its beginnings by a great soprano, Elizabeth Schumann, while Professor Bossart was still a six-year scholarship student at The Curtis Institute, where he was recipient of the Curtis Award upon graduation. Other influences during his formative years were Efrem Zimbalist and Felix Salmond, with whom he studied chamber music.

Professor Bossart’s activities as concert accompanist continued on a reduced scale for many years after he came to the School of Music, but gradually were supplanted by master classes and lectures on the art of accompanying. During summers, he has been on the faculties of the Banff Festival in Canada, the Blossom Festival, and the Chautauqua Summer Music School.

Few faculty members in the history of this institution have made a more significant impact upon its students than Eugene Bossart. The Regents now salute this dedicated musician by naming him Earl V. Moore Professor Emeritus of Music.

OLIN L. BROWDER, Jr., James V. Campbell Professor of Law, will retire from active faculty status as of May 31, 1984, after a dedicated career of teaching and research.

Professor Browder was born in Urbana, Illinois, in 1913. He received his A.B. degree from the University of Illinois in 1935, his LL.B. degree from the University of Illinois in 1937, and his S.J.D. degree from The University of Michigan in 1941. He practiced law in Chicago for a year before beginning his career in teaching. His teaching career was interrupted during the war years by work as an attorney for the Tennessee Valley Authority and as a special agent for the Federal Bureau of Investigation.
Professor Browder began his teaching career at the University of Alabama in 1939. He moved to the University of Tennessee in 1941. Following his government work, he returned to teaching at the University of Oklahoma in 1946. He has taught at The University of Michigan since 1953. In 1979, he was named the James V. Campbell Professor of Law.

Professor Browder is one of the nation's most respected authorities on the law of property. He is the co-author of three widely adopted casebooks, one for use in introductory courses in property; a second for use in advance courses in future interests; and, more recently, a third for use in the basic course in trusts and estates. He also is a co-author of the encyclopedia, American Law of Property, and a frequent contributor to scholarly journals. He has served as chairman of the American Bar Association’s Committee on Rules Against Perpetuities and as a consultant to the Michigan Law Revision Commission in drafting the Michigan Powers of Appointment Act. His work brings a broad concern for the major themes of property law together with a craftsman’s thorough attention to detail. The distinction of the work reflects the skill with which he has attempted to bring the law of property into a broad, theoretical framework.

During more than three decades as a member of the law faculty, Professor Browder has been one of its most popular and effective teachers. He has brought his students not only the intellectual qualities that have distinguished his scholarly work, but also a gentle humor and an obvious concern for their well-being. As director of graduate students for many years, he offered wise counsel to domestic and foreign students who now serve on law faculties throughout the world.

The Regents now salute this accomplished scholar and educator for his long service to The University of Michigan by naming him James V. Campbell Professor Emeritus of Law.

EDWARD ALLISON CHENNEY, professor of dentistry, retired from active faculty status as of April 30, 1984, after 31 years of service as an outstanding teacher and clinician in the orthodontics department of the School of Dentistry. Professor Cheney was born in Albion, Michigan, in 1917, but grew up in Charlotte where he graduated from high school in 1935. After undergraduate schooling at Michigan State University, he entered The University of Michigan School of Dentistry, earning the D.D.S. degree in 1942 and the M.S. degree in orthodontics in 1944. He began his teaching career in 1942 as clinical instructor, was named instructor in 1944, assistant professor in 1948, associate professor in 1953, and professor in 1968.

Professor Cheney played an important role in the school’s orthodontic program for dentistry students during his teaching career, coordinating the curriculum and serving as mainstay of the program. Many of his publications have dealt with aims and objectives in undergraduate orthodontics education programs. His outstanding ability to synthesize complicated ideas for presentation to the beginning orthodontics student made him an excellent teacher, one known for his wealth of knowledge and wisdom. He was an important influence on generations of students as a role model of the dedicated health care professional upholding the highest standards of his field.

During his career, he held a number of leadership positions in organized dentistry, including presidency of the Michigan Dental Association and membership on its Board of Trustees for 10 years. His importance to that organization and to the field of dentistry was recognized in 1975 with the presentation of the MDA’s highest honor, the Meritorious Award. In addition, he served as trustee for the Ninth District of the American Dental Association, as president of the Michigan Society of Orthodontics (an organization he helped found), as president of the Great Lakes Society of Orthodontist, as chairman of the Michigan Orthodontic Forum, and as a director and chairman of the American Board of Orthodontics. He is a diplomate of the American Board, a fellow of the American College of Dentists, and a member of Omicron Kappa Upsilon, a national dental honor society.

Professor Cheney has also rendered outstanding service in allied health areas, helping to organize in the late 1950’s the Michigan Dental Service Corporation, regarded as a model of dental insurance plans. In that connection, he later served on the board of Delta Dental Plan and on the State Health Planning Advisory Council.
