LegalTrac

LegalTrac is a useful resource for locating journal articles published since 1980. This is a web-based index. Note that this is a subscription-based electronic resource that is limited to University of Michigan users. If you do not have a University of Michigan uniquename and password, you will need to come to the library in person to use this source. If you do have a uniquename, you can access this source from anywhere as long as you navigate to it through the law library's homepage as described here.

From the Law Library's Homepage, click on All E-Resources.

Slide 4
From the next page, click on the link to LegalTrac under the heading "Major E-Resources."
From the main LegalTrac search screen, you can perform a variety of searches. Often, you may not have a specific journal article in mind and may want to use a keyword search to locate articles about a certain subject. To do a keyword search from LegalTrac, make sure that "keyword search" is selected below the search box and type your search into the box, then click the "Search" button. For example, if you are interested in finding articles about criminal procedure, type "criminal procedure" and click search.

You can browse the results by scrolling down the screen and using the "Next" button at the top of the screen to flip through the search results pages. Notice the subject terms listed on the left. These terms relate to the keyword search you performed and could help you find additional articles related to your topic.
