Our non-profit research is powered by donors like you.

NRE has posted 2,611 exonerations representing more than 23,000 years lost.

We need your help to reach
3,000
exonerations.

We are on track for one of the busiest years in NRE history. Despite court closures, the Registry has posted 76 cases in 2020. Our researchers continue to monitor exonerations as they happen, and uncover historic exonerations at the same time. We have already seen cases across the country in which the release of potential exonerees has been expedited by COVID-19. As litigators and advocates press courts and governors to urgently release prisoners, our data continues to fuel the fight for freedom.

We can't lose track of wrongful convictions. Support Registry research today!

another man had committed the crime.

Ryan Lewis of New Orleans was convicted of attempted murder in 2004. His conviction was overturned on appeal in 2006, and Lewis was acquitted at a retrial in 2007 after providing a school-attendance record that corroborated his alibi.

Johnetta Carr of Louisville, Kentucky pled guilty in 2008 to manslaughter and other crimes related to the death of her boyfriend. After the jailhouse informant who said Carr confessed to the crime recanted, Carr was pardoned by Gov. Matt Bevin in 2019.

NRE in the News

"We have not exonerated the majority of people who were falsely convicted. The number we see is just the tip of the iceberg. There is really good reason to think that there are a lot more people who are out there who are innocent and have been or are in prison, who have yet to be exonerated or may never be exonerated.

It's an incredibly complicated process to become exonerated of a crime. There is a lot of luck involved, and that's really unfortunate. I think what's really remarkable about Richard Phillips is the fact that he kept going for as long as he did." (Barb O'Brien, NRE Editor)
