

Anna Evangelidi

Anna Evangelidi is a PhD researcher at the City Law School, City University London, UK. Her doctoral research examines whether the existing law of armed conflict (LOAC) - as a legal and moral imperative - is sufficiently developed to deal with unmanned warfare and address its moral complexities. To this end, the research explores the intersection of law, war, ethics and new weapons technologies. Her research interests include LOAC, war and ethics, international law and the use of force, international criminal law, international law and human rights, international dispute settlement.

Anna holds a Law degree (LLB Hons) from the Aristotle University of Thessaloniki, Greece, and an LLM degree in International Law from the University of Bristol, UK. Her LLM dissertation looked at the legality of drone attacks as use of force in self-defence against non-state actors under article 51 of the UN Charter. After completing her LLM studies, Anna worked with the Chambers at the International Criminal Court, The Hague, for H.E. Judge Sanji Mmasenono Monageng. She is a Graduate Teaching Assistant at the City Law School, acting as tutor in European Union Law. Anna is a qualified lawyer, member of the Thessaloniki Bar Association, Greece.
