Francesca Leucci is a PhD Candidate at Rotterdam, Bologna and Hamburg Universities (EDLE, European Doctorate of Law and Economics) and a qualified lawyer admitted to the Italian bar. Her research project investigates the efficiency of remedies for environmental liability at the International, regional (U.S. – E.U.) and national level. Her main focus is on methods of environmental damage assessment used by courts in litigation. Her research interests range from tort law and economics to environmental economics, environmental law and ecology.

This holistic perspective is rooted into a quite interdisciplinary background that combines law, economics and social sciences in a broad sense. After her J.D. in law (competition law) in Italy, she received a LL.M. in EU law (public competition law) at the College of Europe in Bruges. Moreover, she majored in social sciences by attending one of the few schools of excellence for interdisciplinary studies spread around Italy (I.S.U.F.I. in Lecce).

Before academia, she worked as a trainee lawyer at the Public Attorney, as a judge assistant at the Administrative Local Court and as a trainee at the Antitrust Authority in Rome. In addition to her mother tongue (Italian), she speaks fluently English, French and German.
